

Small nonprofit and other grassroots organizations, whose voices are often lost in the cacophony of New York's powerful and well-funded lobbying industry, are pushing for lawmakers to double the $5,000 threshold that requires an individual or entity to register with the state when they seek to influence public policy.

Read more